Narrative - The lighthouse

It was a cold, gloomy evening with the skies as dark as a room with no lights on. The ending of another noisy day and everyone was partying in the inn while I was trying to write in my journal. Unlucky for me, multiple villagers disagreed and they were very loud. The sea was clashing against the shores.

Like I do everyday, I was working at my old, wooden, rusty desk writing in my journal for the day. I was really trying to work in peace and quiet but there was a lot of racket outside. I decided to shut the window. Not long after I had shut the window, the light at the top of the lighthouse suddenly stopped out of the blue.

Instant realization had hit me and I stood up to go and fix it but I fell. Then I stood up once again, lit my lantern and dashed upstairs to the top of the lighthouse. I saw that the light wasn't turning on and it was broken so I had to investigate the problem. After I saw what the problem was, I grabbed my toolbox and opened the casing so that I could get the light to make repairs.

I was being really careful with the light while carrying it and I desperately wanted to fix it because the lighthouse has been there almost one hundred years. As I tried to fix it, I heard a ship coming and that just made me panic even more so I tried to go quickly but that did not help because I ended up tripping once again over my nearby toolbox. When I fell, the glass came down with me so it shattered into millions of pieces.

I then ran downstairs to the bottom of the lighthouse for the last time because I knew that everything was about to end right then and there. As soon as I came outside, I saw the whole land covered in villagers and lights coming to save me and themselves. In groups they started to come all the way up the lighthouse, after everyone had made it to the top, we started to gather around the lighthouse top to bottom. Thankfully the people on the ship saw the lights and they went away. Our plan was a success.
